King County Law Library Offers Remote Access to Nolo, the Leading DIY Legal Database

Seattle, Wash. – The King County Law Library is now offering free remote access to the Nolo Press database for all King County residents via their website, www.kcll.org.

Nolo Press has long been a leader in the consumer-friendly legal information market, offering legal self-help books and forms geared to the most common legal tasks. With resources like “The Quick & Legal Will Book,” “Beat Your Ticket,” “Neighbor Law,” and “Credit Repair,” the Nolo books present complex legal information in a plain English, user-friendly format.

“Prior to the physical closure of the law library due to the pandemic, a large percentage of our walk-in patrons were doing their own legal work and we could point them to relevant print books and forms they could use in the library. Now that we have acquired the Nolo database, our staff can show resources specifically geared to folks doing DIY legal work without having to come into the library” said Barbara Engstrom, Executive Director of the King County Law Library. “The Nolo database exponentially expands access to legal information and in turn access to justice.”

The King County Law Library is presenting a series of free webinars to introduce the Nolo database resources. The first in the series, “Credit & Financial Planning” is scheduled for February 11th at 6pm. Registration information can be found at www.kcll.org/classes-at-the-law-library/classes/
